MERLOT 2016

Interesting to note that owner / winemaker Laurent Delaunay classifies Merlot as a “wine-makers grape” saying that it is a “neutral variety” that “naturally... doesnot have a lot of character or personality” probably why it took them 5 years to find their style with it in their southern France winery, because there really is “no benchmark” (Laurent says) - here you’ll find lots of plum, black cherry and chocolate on the nose with dark berries, spice and black pepper on the palate.

SAUVIGNON BLANC 2017

Fresh and fruit forward Sauvignon Blanc which sees just a few months on “fine lees” during its time in tank - the nose is floral and quite pretty with notes of grapefruit that follow onto the palate with both pith and zest playing a part, there’s even a subtle minerality that peaks through on the long finish.
